COMMENTARY

When the August newsletter was being prepared it looked like being a relatively quiet month for SMAS. Only the regular meeting and BBQ were on the calendar. As it turned out an opportunity came up to fill a couple of galleries at the Centre Mall. The two spaces have been used to promote Bridgecon contests and model building in general. Thanks to Robert Aaberg, Jim Bartko, Wes Braid, Greg Burke, Regan Chovin, Dave DeBack, Noah Kreutzwieser, Ted Lewis, Ron Just, Blair Marriot, Lorne Sveinbjorson and Wayne Welker, two galleries are now suitably dressed.

In addition to the mall display, another "Sunday Build" was organized at the comic book store. All in all during the month there were several opportunities to socialize and show off what our hobby is all about. Now getting more into our winter routine, Sunday Builds are scheduled for September, October and November at the Alice Turner Branch Library. Because there was enough interest in a Sunday Build at the end of the month, a further one at the comic book store will be scheduled for the end of September.

A look at the calendar will show that the regular, full-blown show in all five galleries at the Centre Mall has been set for January and February of 2019. In the coming months various ideas for themes can be discussed. Also one thing that was done differently for the current small display, was to encourage individual club members to take space just for their own work. No reason why that concept cannot be continued and expanded. One query has already been received about the use of electric power in the galleries. Obviously the model installation has to be safe but other than that there is no restriction. One drawback with long-term display of many of the dioramas currently being built and lit, is that the lighting is battery powered. For one or two day shows with lots of access that obviously is not a problem, but replacement of batteries in the galleries is impractical.

FILE AWAY

Our attention was drawn to this file set by Noah Kreutzwieser, who found it at Princess Auto. It consists of a handle with a collet at one end, while the other end has removable cap. The handle is hollow so the files can be stored inside. The files are a bit coarser than the more familiar Swiss needle files and will definitely have a place in the tool box. One small problem was that the collet was not very flexible and needed to be “worked” a little before it would accept a file.

SHOPPING CART

Riddle me this - what link exists between denim jeans, ducks and dominoes? None at all that I can think of, so let's move to the next riddle. In what way can a ship, sandbags and solder be related? That is a much easier one. The ship is a 1/350th model of the WW2 Japanese battleship Yamato being made by Dave DeBack. Sandbags were an addition to the real vessel in an effort to protect gun crews in exposed positions (Photos 1 and 2). So that is where the solder comes in at 1/350th scale, because Dave decided to make individual sandbags using solder. It was accomplished with side cutters that crimped the ends of each piece. Upon examining these tiny pieces, it is possible to see why Dave decided not to attempt reproducing the stitching at the ends.

The solder used (Photo 3) came from B & E Electronics on Faithfull Avenue. There are at least two different versions of this 28-gauge coil. They have slightly different metal content but that is of no importance when used like this. It must be mentioned that B & E also carries larger diameter solder in coils. The sandbags are not the first time solder has been used for detailing models. If memory serves correct, Murray Kish (currently still in exile in Switzerland), used small diameter solder for exhaust pipes on a racing car. Reports state that larger diameter solder has also been used to make replacement exhaust pipes on models in the 1/24th and 1/25th range.

There may also be an application for the 28-gauge material for pipes on 1/12th scale cars in addition to large scale aero engines. It appears many Tamiya racing car kits include soft plastic items for engine plumbing, so using a replacement with a metal item may just improve not only the ease of construction, but also the final appearance.

Continuing with materials available for automotive detailing is the wire (Photo 4) from Princess Auto. As with many things in that store it may be there in limited quantities as part of their surplus section. Looks as though it will be useful for plug wiring in the 1/24th and 1/25th scales.

HOLIDAY HOBBY SHOPS

On a recent vacation to the United States for a family reunion, I found myself in Vancouver for the return portion of it. I had done some previous homework and found Imperial Hobbies was right on my way. Bill Cromwell had confirmed to me that this was a great hobby store, so I made the trip to investigate. Bill was not wrong! All I can say is...WOW! This store is a treasure trove of all things plastic.

Upon entering the premises, I was warmly greeted by Alexander Hock, the Assistant Manager. I explained my purpose for visiting (purchase and possibly an article) and he let me know a bit of their history. Imperial Hobbies opened in 1986 and moved to this present location about 2.5–3 years ago. There are regular days for playing card games/DnD games in the back, but Alex told me that anyone can “pull up a table” and get to building a kit if they want.

As you will see in the pictures, there is something for everyone in this massive store. Flames of War, fantasy games, and a great selection of plastic kits will have you browsing the day away!

PRESENCE AT THE EXHIBITION

Although SMAS did not have a display at the Saskatoon Exhibition this year, Greg Burke most certainly was a participant. After the Collectors Show earlier in the year, Greg was invited to put his ships on display at the EX. This is the eye-catching result.

SMAS meets on the first Wednesday of each month at the Parkridge Centre, 110 Gropper Crescent, Saskatoon (off Fairlight Drive), officially starting at 7:00 p.m. Any suitable material received for the newsletter on the Sunday before the meeting, stands a very good chance of being printed for that issue.
